2009 Kawasaki KLX450R from the (2011) Movie Priest
Own a piece of Hollywood History

Why own a regular dirt bike when you can own one from the 2011 film Priest! This 2009 KLX450R is almost like new and then aged down by the special effects department to fit the apocalyptic vibe of the movie, along with some added stylized pieces that will stand out from the crowd. Take this bike out to the dunes and stop people in there tracks.

A centuries long war between humans and vampires has devastated the planet's surface and led to a theocracy under an organization called The Church. They constructed giant walled cities to protect mankind and developed a group of elite warriors, the Priests, to turn the tide against the vampires. The majority of the vampires were killed, while the remainder were placed in reservations. With the war over, the Clergy disbanded the Priests. Outside the walled cities, some humans seek out a living, free from the totalitarian control of the Church.

The Kawasaki 2009 KLX450R may have inherited the lightweight engine and chassis from the multiple championship winning KX450F motocrosser, but it is much more than a high-strung racer. . . Designed for the rigors of the off-road world, the KLX450R delivers a wide spread of power with high-traction torque and superior throttle control, combined with the enhanced durability, comfort, and long range that's required in unforgiving off-road environments - motousa.com
